

Reflection of Milestone 1: Figma Player Cards

My theme colour is golden brown, and the idea came from the background of my avatar: "Hamilton the Musical." Hamilton, the musical itself is a symbol of creativity, using modern rap and hip-pop material to express the youth and vitality of the United States, easy to understand, but one also can see the new ideas to adapt the whole historical biography into pop music, this is my definition of "innovation", and the goal of my efforts. The golden-brown colour is also a common colour for ancient books such as parchment scrolls, which shows that my innovative framework is made up of practical and meaningful content.

I must mention something about the meme. This one looks pointless, but I wanted it to show a freewheeling style because creativity tends to pop up when you're lost in thought. Also, the meme carries a little hint of craziness to show my inner chaotic side, and I'll be happy to get people who get that kind of humour.

When it came to the challenges of making the card, the first one was learning how to upload the image to fit into the header frame. I thought there would be an "import" function, but I didn't see it on the right-hand menu, so I had to pull the image tighter into the card frame and adjust. Honestly, I hope the "import" function will be in Figma in the future because adjusting it myself is just too much of a redundant step.

This is the first time I've designed a character card, and the pre-set card frames this time were a great help. I didn't have to worry about what kind of content to put in, and it was relatively easy to use a brief description to show my character. This will be a creative reference for me to use in my design.
